THE TALKING MACHINE. AN INVENTION FOR THE AMELICRATION. OF DRAMATIC LIFE.

Professor Faber recently gave a exhibition of the vocal powers of his wonderful talk-Hotel. It would be tame to say that those present were most agreeably entertained. The results of Professor Faber's scientific handiwork is almost marvellous.

The machine (so-called) was a curious and complicated piece of mechanism. All, or nearly all its are fully exposed to the view of the coserver, and are more puzzling than imposing in appointance. The main portions rest upright on a small table, at one end of which the operator sits before a series of levers, which are worked as the keys of a piano. Beneath, is the treadle of a bellows, which latter is attached above to perform the mechanical functions of the lungs of the machine. Wood and Indiarubber are the unterials out of which the vocal apparatus is constructed, in a striking similarity to the organs of the human being. The lungs, glottie, thorax, throat, tongue, lips, jaws, and nasal tubes are made to do-their respective work in vocalization. The various Articulate, inarticulate, hasal, liquid and sibilant sounds are equally well given. Some words are enunciated with amazing distinetness; phrases and sentences in English. stood. Not only did Professor Faber give the words and sentences from his own dictation to Madame Faber, who operates the machine, but he permitted the persons present to dictale at their pleasure. The machine literally talks. and with a decidedly foreign accent. It sounds. A mask is put over the mouth and an Indiarubber attachment is made to produce the French musal sounds, which are perfectly given-"Bon soir," and "Comment vous portes vous, Messieurs et Mesdames," are well spoken. Such Hotel, papa, mamma, etc., are easily rendered. Professor Faber is a very intelligent gentleman, speaks with a strong foreign accent, is formal politeness, and altogether an interesting person to see and interview. Madame Faber is equally interesting; but does her talking entirely through the mediumship of the machine, and Professor Faber can beat that talking any day or night; so he is, of course, a happy man. A number of Hills, South-west of Hangebow, is altogether the Lin-yin convent and was bitting at his gentlemen present seemed desirous of exchanging their wives' sewing machines for talking

Referring to a report which appeared in the newspapers on Saturday, Dr. Beke, on the authority of a correspondent in Congo, that Dr. Livingstone was then only twenty days' march from the writer, and detained by a native potentate for want of means of ransom, hir Bartle said they had been so often misled and disappointed by simihar reports, that they must wait for further intelligence before they attached much weight to it, and they must hear from Dr. Livingstone himself in the course of the next two months. At same time, there was no inherent impossibility in that report. If Dr. Livingstone was out of the Nile Busin he might be in the Congo Basin, or the two might the connected, and it he succeeded in establishing that, no traveller would have accomplished a more arduous feat, or have established a more important geogra-Proceeding, theo, with the ordinary inaugural address respecting geographical in-guiry during the recess, Sir Bartle Frere said that Arctic discovery was the important subject to which he should have to refer, as some important facts had been brought to light by Commander Markham, R.N., on which a paper would be read that evening by Mr. Clements Markham, their secretary, and he was sure Arctic officers present would weigh well the strong evidence farnished by the voyage of the Polaris as to the soundness of what had before been more or less a mere hypothesis, viz., the existence, of an open-water channel leading north of Smith's Sound, and which channel might be now more free from ice than at any previous period of which we have any knowledge. Captain Markham was himself an experienced havigator, and the account he gaveof the facilities which the employment of a Indo-Chinese Sugar Company 90 per cent. steamer like that in which he sailed afforded for Arctic pavigation must suggest the propriety of a further expedition, with a view to setting ut rest questions which had occupied the attendays of Queen Elizabeth. N., the crew of the Polaris found that the lowest temperature was minus 49 dec., which was much higher than the temperature of points much further South, where our own Aratio expeditions have wintered. Captain Markham's own experience in the Arctic merely went to show that such a vessel-she being a strong iron serew of 489 tons and 70 horse-power - could force her way with easethrough process which used entirely to stop the progress of the sailing expeditions, and that she had fored her way through the floes called the middle ice," which often proved an implication obstacle to Arctic navigators, in 60 hours. In the ordimary course of fishing, the Arctic had gone further North than allburgeratest expeditions, and would have gone to the point attained by the Polaris if the captain had expected to find whiles there. From is experience, therefore, of the altered conditions of Arolio exploration by the use of a stout steamer, Captain Markham was of opinion that a properly fitted out naval expedition weald casily complete the crowning feat of reaching the North Pole.
